

Eric McLendon
CEO and Founder
Clear National Title

CEO and Founder Eric McLendon established Clear National Title to raise the bar on title service. His experience as a contractor, investor, developer, and an award-winning sales agent for one of New York's largest brokerage firms was the catalyst for his vision, and his success.

Eric has emerged as an accomplished leader and recognizable figure both in real estate and across a multitude of professional networks.

A proud minority business owner with inspiring entrepreneurial roots, he brings capability, ingenuity and reassurance to the most complex real estate transactions. His goal is to empower Clear's clientele with superior service they can rely on, as well as financial rewards they simply will not find elsewhere. In the fall of 2019, Clear National Title participated in closing more than $2.5 Billion in major New York real estate transactions.

Eric's impressive accomplishments in the real estate industry began as being a finalist for the prestigious Real Estate Board of New York Rookie of the Year Award, and have continued with top awards for his exemplary performance. Most important is his stellar reputation as an upstanding individual among his clients, peers and community.

A native of Chicago, Eric holds a degree in Broadcast Journalism from Texas Christian University. He also lived in Alabama, Connecticut and California prior to settling in New York. This proud Emmy and Peabody Award winner spent 14 years as a sportscaster, most recently at WNBC in NYC, before turning his on-camera talent to acting on hit shows like "Law and Order", "Criminal Intent" and "Recipe for Success" and on the Food Network which he hosted.
